
Acknowledgments

The Institute of Mathematical Statistics has begun an ambitious new monograph series in statistics, and I am grateful to the editors David Cox, Xiao-Li Meng, and Susan Holmes for their encouragement, and for letting me in on the ground floor. Diana Gillooly, the editor at Cambridge University Press (now in its fifth century!) has been supportive, encouraging, and gentle in correcting my literary abuses. My colleague Elizabeth Halloran has shown a sharp eye for faulty derivations and confused wording. Many of my Stanford colleagues and students have helped greatly in the book's final development, with Rob Tibshirani and Omkar Muralidharan deserving special thanks. Most of all, I am grateful to my associate Cindy Kirby for her tireless work in transforming my handwritten pages into the book you see here.

Bradley Efron
Department of Statistics
Stanford University